Supported by

The Transportation Research Board, with support from the Federal Highway Administration, will host a workshop focusing on how the National Household Travel Survey data is used in transportation planning and practice and how it informs decision making. Individuals are encouraged to submit brief abstracts to be considered for presentation.

Presentation proposals are due February 9, 2011.

The workshop objectives are to bring together data producers, analysts, policy makers, and other interested stakeholders to

- Illustrate the use of NHTS and other travel data sources to support transportation decision making in key issue areas;
- Share case studies of strategies and methods for enhancing the effectiveness of NHTS and other travel databases to inform decisions.
- Share the results of NHTS-based investigations and innovative applications of other data sources to provide a more complete picture of travel behavior in the United States;

- Identify emerging trends and issues in travel behavior that are now or should be illustrated by NHTS;

It is expected that the workshop will enhance knowledge and appreciation of the ways in which NHTS informs policy decisions; broaden the constituency for planning future NHTS surveys; and provide guidance for more directly linking travel data collection, analysis and dissemination programs to planning and policy issues.

See the committee's general concept of a possible program structure at <http://onlinepubs.trb.org/onlinepubs/Conferences/2011/NHTS1/program.pdf>.

The planning committee will evaluate presentation abstracts and determine program tracks based on conference objectives and submitted abstracts.
